John and Mary are new college students in Sydney. They are talking about the difference between life in the city and life in the *countryside.

John: You grew up in the countryside, didn't you, Mary?

Mary: Yes, I did. I grew up in a small town (あ)(call) Leeton. It is surrounded by a lot of farms, and only 11,000 people live there. How about you?

John: Well, I'm a country boy. I grew up on a farm which was twenty kilometers away from the nearest town. This is my first time to live in a big city. So, when did you move to Sydney, Mary?

Mary: About five years ago.

John: Do you like living in a big city?

Mary: Yes, I do. I like my life in Sydney better than in the countryside. There are many things which (い)(be) really interesting.

John: Oh, really? Can you give me some examples?

Mary: OK. For example, there are many restaurants, museums, and shopping centers and I can see many kinds of shows. There are many more things to do and see!

John: Oh, I see, but I hear that cities are (A) than the countryside. There are many more *crimes in a big city and there are a lot of traffic accidents, too. So, I think that the countryside is (B), and I also think that life in the countryside is easier because people there are kinder and more honest.

Mary: Maybe that's true. People in the city aren't as *open and friendly as people in the countryside, and the streets aren't as safe. But, if you are (C), the city isn't so dangerous.

John: How about the cost of living? I have heard that living in the city is much more expensive than living in the countryside, right?

Mary: Oh, yes. A lot of things we need in our daily lives are (D) in the city. However, it is also true that you can make more money and (う)there are more chances to find a good job in the city.

So, I think that the most important thing to increase the birthrate in Japan is to change our way of thinking about paternity leave. Young people, like you and I, can make some changes. First, we should learn more about the system of paternity leave in other countries. There must be many ways to improve our system. Second, we should change our way of thinking toward new fathers. When we become adults and start working, and when our co-worker has a baby, we should not only say, "Congratulations!" but also, "Don't worry about your work! Spend as long with your baby as you can. We will take care of (え) it." If young people understand how important paternity leave is, this idea will naturally spread among young working men and women in Japan. If workers create this kind of atmosphere, more men and women may *consider having children.

What do you think about my idea? Let's give it a try!

- ア The number of babies who were born in Japan last year was around 8 million.
- イ In Japan, many women usually don't continue to work though their husbands always help women take care of their children.
- ウ Japanese men do not support their wives as much as men in some other countries.
- エ Swedish men can take paternity leave easily because women return to work after their babies are born.
- オ If we want to increase the number of Japanese men taking paternity leave, workers will have to change their way of thinking.
